Just a Girl

by Izzy Farrar

I'm just a girl that learned how to Snow Ski. Of all of the cool, unique trips I've experienced, snow skiing is one of the activities that I had never tried. Living in Texas and taking mainly summer and spring vacations, I had never really experienced heavy snow. This Christmas break, my brother and I flew up to Salt Lake City Utah for a winter adventure. We stayed with family and learned how to ski in Park City, which definitely has heavy snow in winter.

Since I've never set foot on a mountain during a winter month, I decided it would be smart to sign up for ski school. The first thing we learned was how to put on the skis, especially without immediately sliding down the mountain as soon as they were clipped on. We then learned to pizza, which is fortunate as I've learned stopping is the most important skill to have when skiing. Next, we made our way over to the smallest of bunny hills, and practiced staying balanced while moving, turning and of course stopping. Although I had no prior skiing experience, I was aware that to stop - you pizza, so I was surprised when that was the one skill that I struggled with most. I was barreling down that little mound, doing my best to pizza as hard as I could to no avail. No matter how wide of a wedge I tried to form or how deep I dug the edges of my skis into the snow, I was not stopping or even maintaining control.

We took a short lunch break during which I decided that once we hit the slopes again, I would practice my stopping until I reached perfection. Post lunch our group did one more practice run on the small bunny slope and then headed over to First Time, the real bunny slope. We lined up and learned how to get on and off a ski lift and then it was time to go. One of my proudest accomplishments this trip was that I never fell getting on or off the lift even though my little brother punched me in the head during our first time deboarding. I was nervous our first time down the real slope, since I didn't

On day two, I skied with my cousins which meant it was time to hit some real runs. We headed up the mountain and skied down Home Run, which was a little harder than I expected. The stopping practice the day before came in handy and I successfully completed my first real run. Unfortunately, after wrestling with the inability to stop, I had two speeds - wildly out of control fast or overly cautiously slow. But with practice throughout the day I worked on building up speed and becoming more comfortable and in control of my skis.

We took a day off from skiing to swim in a hot spring crater and I learned how to ice skate – fun!

On day three, my cousins took me even higher up the mountain where we skied down Bonanza and then Home Run. One thing that added to my confidence was my cousin's opinions that Home Run was a difficult green, which made me feel better about my wipeouts. I took day three easier, and relaxed so I could enjoy the skiing rather have great control and there were now a lot more people to run into, but I made it down safely with only one minor incident where I couldn't stop. The rest of the day we practiced going down First Time and I still struggled with stopping and slowing down. After ski school my aunt and uncle came to ski with us and my uncle taught me how to stop by turning and pointing my skis up the mountain instead of pizzaing which helped a lot.

than focusing on not dying the entire time. It was a good day and I was really tired after three days of skiing. Although I had fun skiing and learning a new skill, I've decided that winter sports are probably not my strong suit. I love to learn new activities, but I'm not instantly good at all of them and this may be one of my less impressive performances. I realized that skiing is harder than it looks and it will take more practice to become proficient at this sport. But hey, all that means is this girl will have to take another winter adventure to continue building on her skiing abilities. AW

Trekking to Santiago

by Eliza Nelson

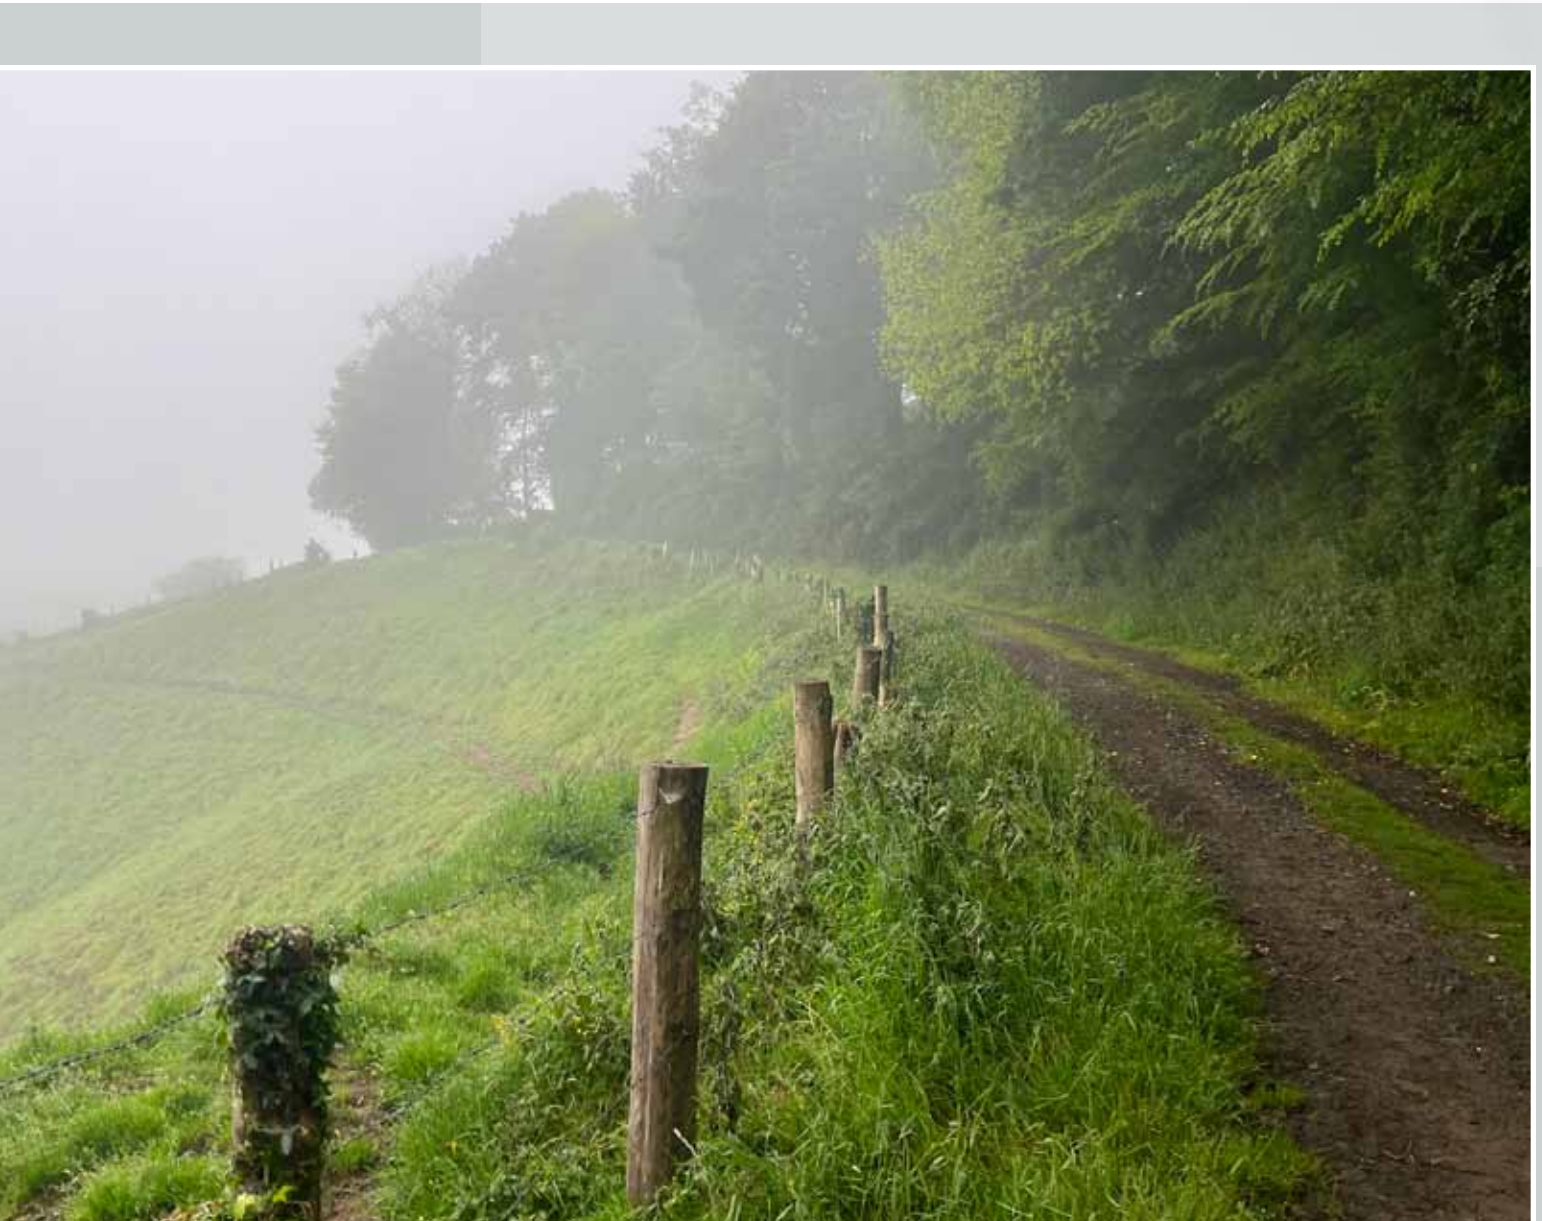

← VILAPIÑOL

PUNTO LIMPIO

At the end of May of this year, I boarded a plane to Europe for the first time. Though I longed to wander European streets, taste new dishes and hear an abundance of foreign words, I mostly desired to prove to myself that I could navigate a new place, and that I could do so by myself.

This desire manifested itself in different ways during my two-month solo trip, but in Spain it presented itself in the 200-mile trek I did across the northwestern countryside. Trekking across Spain to reach Santiago de Compostela near the western coast has been a tradition for centuries. The first pilgrim, King Alfonso II, made his way from the cathedral in Oviedo to the cathedral in Santiago in 813. In doing so, he hoped to pay tribute to St. James, whose remains were held in the cathedral. Alfonso II's route to Santiago, later termed the "Camino Primitivo", became known as the original pilgrimage to Santiago. Today there are hundreds of different routes to Santiago beginning in various parts of Spain and dozens of other countries.

I first heard of the “Camino de Santiago” from a mentor who biked from Oviedo to Santiago a few years ago. The following year, one of my childhood friends trekked from France to Santiago with his girlfriend, sharing his feelings about the experience on social media. The moment I realized both people in my life had, for their own personal reasons, completed a lengthy trek across Spain to the same alluring city, I felt the itch to board a plane and begin the adventure myself.

On May 28, 2024, I stared at the overcast skies surrounding Oviedo’s innate cathedral in the early morning, wondering what the thirteen days ahead of me had in store. I breathed in and out, and then took my first step.

Quickly, I became accustomed to the click-click of my trekking poles on the pavement. The first couple miles involved winding through the streets of Oviedo, before ascending up into the green hillside that led to the Cantabrian mountains. The day was longer and more difficult than I expected. My initial excitement wavered at different points, particularly during the hot hours of early afternoon when every rock seemed to be digging into the soles of my shoes. Despite the company of new friends I encountered on the trail, my hips ached from carrying such a heavy pack, and I longed to have completed the day’s mileage. Eventually, I arrived in the city of Grado after nearly seven hours of walking.

Pilgrims on the Camino stay in hostels designated specifically for those making the pilgrimage. This means that on the first day of the trek I was quickly surrounded by dozens of other people with the same goal because we shared lodging. For the next twelve days, I would talk and sweat, eat and laugh, walk and cry with these stranger-turned-friends.

Each day of the Camino presented its unique challenges. Sometimes, the uphill felt never-ending, the hot trail stretching off into the distance seemingly forever. Other days, the downhills proved to be surprisingly treacherous. Steep descents slowed the speed of every traveler, all of us fearing for a turned ankle or injured knees. At some moments I walked in a big group with many pilgrims, chatting about the journey behind and ahead of us while we stopped for lunch. Other days I walked completely alone, left to contemplate why I had decided to fly to Spain in the first place. Sometimes the heat scorched my legs, and during other moments the misty rain dampened my mood. On day three the blister on my right foot left me in such excruciating pain that I limped my way to my shared room, and collapsed onto my bed into a silent eruption of tears. I didn't think I could continue, and began wondering if I should just give up. The late lunch I had with my friends afterwards felt even more overwhelming and disappointing. I couldn't understand as much Castilian Spanish as I anticipated, and with every word and joke I missed, I began to feel increasingly alone.

Despite the pain I was experiencing both physically and emotionally, I decided to take another step. And I did so every day for the next ten days.

In total, I walked over 200 miles before reaching Santiago de Compostela on June 9, 2024!

When I look back to my experience trekking on foot from one part of Spain to the other, I have a lot of gratitude in my heart. Certainly, I'm thankful to have wandered new streets and trails, to have tried delicious food and to have learned new phrases in Castilian. I also feel thankful to have completed an ambitious goal I set many months ago. More than anything else, however, I feel privileged to have met and befriended so many kind hearted, selfless, curious and adventurous people. I could not have completed the Camino without their support and friendship. When I think of my time in Spain, I don't focus on the days and hours I spent alone, but instead I dwell on the moments I shared with the fellow travelers walking with me. I'm already looking forward to my next Camino. AW

Radian Weapons AFTERBURNER + RAMJET
The Radian Weapons AFTERBURNER + RAMJET are a micro compensator and ported match grade barrel that will significantly reduce recoil while improving the accuracy of your Glock. Legal in all 50 states, the hardened stainless-steel AFTERBURNER compensator is corrosion resistance, virtually eliminating all erosion from muzzle blast. The AFTERBURNER uses an INTRA-LOK mounting system which requires users to slide the compensator over the barrel and then insert and tighten the locking screw, timing the compensator as it locks down onto the upper barrel. The INTRA-LOK mounting system makes removal of the compensator for cleaning simple and repeatable for just about any user. The AFTERBURNER features an angled front face to ease holstering and the compensator will reduce recoil by up to 44%. The threadless, hardened 416R stainless-steel RAMJET barrel is also easy to remove for cleaning and will increase the accuracy of your Glock. When installed on a Glock G19 the combination increases the overall length of the slide to the equivalent of a G17, providing compatibility with G17 holsters. The Radian Weapons AFTERBURNER + RAMJET are an upgrade that will immediately improve the performance of your Glock along with adding a stylish look.

Radian Weapons Guardian + Six
The Radian Weapons Guardian + Six provides the strongest Glock MOS optic mount available with some awesome additional features. Radian starts by providing a protective barrier for your RMR optic, letting the guardian take the dings instead of your optic. The Guardian features TRU-SEAL, which are O-rings on the mounting screws that provide a water tight seal between the plate and the slide, eliminating corrosion and the need for an added sealing plate. The mount also uses STUD-LOK, Radian's proprietary threaded stud/nut mounting interface which provides longer thread engagement, greater hold down power and increased shear resistance, insuring your sight stays securely in place on the pistol. The 7075-aluminum mount even has built in anti-slag, co witness back-up sights in case your red dot malfunctions. The Radian Weapons Guardian + Six is a simple design that is packed full of useful features that will enhance your shooting experiences while protecting your pistol and optic.
